Council has a Pro-longed Session.

The Gas by-law, combined with various other important matters, occupied the city fathers on Thursday evening, but a long evening.

The Mayor (A. F. Duhungo) presided with the members and the attendance—Committees present, Rotarians, Cotton, Hopkins, Hura and E. Loutit—Seo-trav. Bateman, Seltzer Lyons and Caled MacAloney.

The following by-laws were given the first reading:

Finance by-law, empowering the Council to issue a note for the debt left over from the village Council.

By-law for the appointment of Secretary. This by-law was given its third reading, and it was decided to bind the Secretary to the extent of $2,000.

The gas by-law was read a second time and referred to the Finance Committee for the necessary changes to be made before its adoption.

The fire, water and light committee reported on the matter of fire protection, and considerable discussion ensued as to the purchase of a chemical fire extinguisher.

Finally, the Chairman of the Fire, Water and Light committee was instructed to communicate with the different companies and obtain their price, etc.

Approval was received from H. A. Smitil of the pool hall, for license for barbers chair.—Granted.

The question of an adequate supply of water again arose, and after being discussed at length, it was decided to drill a well 300 feet deep in depth and 60 in diameter. Tentatives to remain open until March 1st. The meeting then adjourned.

The following resolution was passed:

"That whereas, the Bow Island Board of Trade has proposed an application to such proposed expansion of gas, believing that if such was accomplished, it would materially retard the industrial and commercial progress of not only Bow Island, Medicine Hat and surrounding points to the benefit of drilling well 300 feet deep in depth and 60 in diameter."

Now therefore be it Resolved: That the Bow Island Board of Trade seek aid and cooperation of the Board of Trade, Industrial Bureau, Municipal Affairs, Department of Health, Department of Medicine, Hat, Brooks, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Calgary, Lethbridge and other important points of Alberta, who are interested in the matter, to assist in getting the bill introduced in the Legislative Assembly.

And Whereas, the Bow Island Development League, looking towards the enactment of legislation, which will prohibit the sale of petroleum out of the Province of our Natural Gas.

Further be it Resolved, that the Secretary communicate at once with organizations above mentioned in that no valuable time might be lost.

The regular meeting of the Board of Trade held on Monday night was marked by an excellent attendance.

A. F. Duhungo, vice-president, who had introduced yesterday's motion, spoke of the fact that this was the first meeting to be presided over by his new President, P. L. Leach. He said that he did not think it was necessary for him to speak, as Mr. Leach had done so well.

He then turned the floor over to Mr. Leach's past work on the last meeting, that the latter had taken in Board of Trade work in Southern Alberta.

This was known to them all. Neither did they believe it necessary for him to speak, as he had done so well.

Mr. Leach then said that he had paid several visits to Bow Island previous to deciding upon making this town his permanent headquarters and he believed he was right in taking this particular location.

He said he had thought it was just as good and just as lively an interest in this Board of Trade as he had previously done in the various organisations which he had been connected with.

Mr. Masterson then invited Mr. Leach to take the chair.

In a spirit of address, the President cordially extended his thanks to the members for their support and their confidence in electing him as their President. It was then voted that the new President be called Mr. Leach.

Mr. Masterson then stated that he would do his best to justify Mr.

Leach during his term of office.

Calgary, Jan. 21.—With four or five hundred farmers from all the provinces represented, the United Farmers of Alberta opened their convention at Page Hall this morning and the first session was opened.

It is estimated that four thousand delegates will be in attendance.

After the opening session by Mr. H. H. Marshall outlined the elaborate platform of the provincial government not as the government viewed it, but as he himself saw it.

It was his opinion that the best way to handle agriculture was to give the government power to equip the elevators, then let the farmers take stock to the extent of the balance, and pay the money due to the government in taxes on the grain.

After the debate was adjourned, the speakers were built, he believed it best to allow the Grain Growers to operate them under a definite agreement with the government.

He also believed that the farmers should have a say in the manner in which it was handled after it was grown.

In our experimental farm he said, we are running a great many experiments to determine what we do, and in that way he believes that it is to get along on the farm in the west, and if we do that and nothing else, he believed they had served the purpose for which they were organized.

Frenzies turned away with a snarl, then he hesitated. What about that money I offered you? hadn't you better take it and clear up your debts?

There was silence. Scheriner found it difficult to speak. He knew it would be no easy matter to win Iris de Fontaine, and marriage was the only way to secure her. He got out of his aunt's. Credit could hold for another year or two, get a job, and then he could pay off his debts. It seemed mad to refuse, but gamblers were not known for their sense of humor. Fred Scheriner still had a sense of honor left, a sense of decency.

No, thanks, he said thickly. I'll handle through my own, somehow. So he did.

Leaning against the railing, Franks watched him walk away. He waited until he was out of sight, then avoiding the lift, he climbed the staircase to his own floor. It entered the doorway, and the light from the window lights, looked slowly round the room, it mocked him, it seemed empty and bare. He walked across the room and into the diningroom and seated himself before the fire. There was a little book and papers there, plans for the alterations and improvements of the country house at Pincher, he noted the little sketch of one of the new stables, the grounds, the rose garden, the flower beds, the trees, the paths to pieces and flung them in the waste paper basket.

Early next morning, dressed in a sober grey suit, Captain the Honourable Fred Scheriner, the first son of Fred Scheriner Towers, had not slept well, but this morning he stepped out briskly on the full moon.

One minute he paused to take deep breaths of the sweet country air, the hillside was covered with green pasture land there was the amount of beautiful timber, the hedges sweetly smelling, the birds singing, the air was filled with the song of bird and the hum of bee. Butterflies flitted to and fro, the flowers were in bloom, every life was worth living and love was its chief asset.

He walked slowly through the long drives. A few deer were browsing in the park. Below him the sun shone, blazed of colour announced the summer, Lady Mary a chief joy. A long stone balustrade led down to the terrace. The great red stone building was almost surrounded with red and white roses. Scheriner moved slowly, looking quietly along the terrace, then entered the open veranda, where he stopped. As a rule he respected his own privacy, but this morning he stepped out briskly on the full moon.

Breakfast was simple, breakfast had been cleared away. Scheriner was about to ring the bell, when he heard a noise, he turned and going on to the terrace again he spied the garden. Presently he saw a small bird, a sparrow, alight on a branch of scarlet geraniums. A curious smile crossed his face as he descended the steps and ran across the lawn. Lady Mary did not hear him coming, she had been sitting by her side a small barrow which emitted a horrible odour. Trowels,

DISFIGURED WITH ERUPTIONS ON FACE

Body Covered With Running Sores, Could Not Sleep From Itching and Pain, Cross and Fretful, Tried Fifty Remedies Without Result, Cured in Nine Days by Cuticura Soap and Ointment.

55 Chancery St., Montreal, Quebec.—"I am a poor man who has nothing from what the doctor said was 'a grating'! His body was all covered with pimpls and opened up into sores, and I could not sleep because I made it worse. The eruptions appeared on my face, neck and chest, and disturbed him awful."

The boy could not sleep at night, and I did not know what to do with him. It made him cross and fretful. If I have to go to bed, I have to sit up without result. At last I got samples of Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and after using it for nine days, the sores disappeared. I then bought a full-sized can of Cuticura Soap and one less of Cuticura Ointment and I used it twice daily. I also applied Cuticura Soap freely, and then applied the Cuticura Ointment. After I had suffered three weeks of misery, I was cured. I started to use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and nine days after the boy was cured, he was sleeping soundly again." (Signed) E. Cloutier, Dec. 12, 1911.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere. A single set is often sufficient. Liberal samples will be sent free on application. Address post card: Cuticura Drug & Cosmetic Corp., Dept. 400, Boston, U.S.A.

forks and rakes surrounded her, and in a large basket by her side, plants to be bedded out, and cuttings.

Scheriner stood beside her, grimly watching her. She had on a cap, and were a pair of earth-toned gloves; beneath her old and weather-worn attire, however, lay a slender young girl's body. The breeze blew wisps of her gray hair across her face, small tears of sweat trickled down her cheeks, and then she muttered incomprehensibly. She was not talking to herself, but to me.

"Hello, Aunt Mary!" She did not start, she did not even raise her head. Yet for a moment she paused in her occupation, then went on with her work, she bent over the plants, and filled them with manure.

Scheriner held his breath until she was gone.

"Up early, aren't you? Lady Mary said in a dry, brittle voice. What did you do all night, eh? Did you stay here?"

No, the scene repeated itself. She was silent, she did not even move, she did not stir, she did not even raise her head. Yet for a moment she paused in her occupation, then went on with her work, she bent over the plants, and filled them with manure.

Scheriner held his breath until she was gone.

"Don't fatter yourself. I'm not going to eat you. You're not better than me. You won't get a penny from me."

Scheriner hurried out the other door.

For the first time in my life I haven't come home."

Lady Mary looked up. In spite of the dry, withered skin, the wrinkles around her eyes, her hair, her hair was aglow, her eyes were as bright and piercing as those of a bird. Her smile was like the sun.

Lady Mary lovingly dug her hands into the enveloping skirt and seat of the chair, and then she said:

"I'm not good for you. You're not good for me."

I suppose you're not good for me.

She was silent, she did not even raise her head.

Save Systematically

Hazardous, occasional saving seldom accomplishes much. It's the steady, persistent, regular depositing of so many dollars a week, or month, or season, in the Union Bank of Canada, which makes one financially independent. The money accumulates all the more rapidly, too, because of the interest which is added every six months.

The Board of Trade is one of the most useful organizations of any kind that can be formed, upon which the residents can depend upon, or can look to, to take up the questions of the mutual and general interests of the inhabitants.

The Bow Island Board has consisted of the leading business men and sources of the town and district. It has never neglected to take up any question that would help to bring the town or would help to build up the community. In this laudable effort it has had the most cordial support of every business man. That it was not done by chance is evident.

CAPTURING A BURGLAR

And What Happened After the Holdup.

By HARRIET LEMMIE SMITH.

Scott sat on the step of the gulfith and fanned himself with his hat. Through the open door came the sound of feminine voices, animated and eager. The young man's eyes met the laughing faces of a group of schoolgirls in their depths. He had noticed one or two pretty girls in the throng of older women who were engrossing the church supper, but apparently they were too busy for him. He was advanced, however, with a sense of injury that his visit was opening tamely.

"Chester?" It was his aunt's brisk voice, and he turned quickly. "Edgar! Aunt Anna liked to see you so hourly. In her summons la read a promise of occupation and welcomed it regardless of its nature." Now was he destined to be disappointed?

"This is my home, Mr. Scott," said Aunt Anna, addressing a group of old ladies, who acknowledged the introduction by a collective smile. "Well be delighted to do any little errands for us. Come along with us, Mrs. Mrs. Anderson, tell him about your spouse."

"Mrs. Anderson beamed gratefully on the young man. "I'm sure it's a friendly kind of you, Mr. Scott. You see, we're short of spoons, and I want to send you some from home."

"Yes it is," said Chester. "It's a long way to Maine at right angles, and my house is a yellow cottage on the right, with a double door on the porch. I'll go and get some for you now. Go straight through the hall into the dining room, and the spoons are to the left, just inside the doorway. It's a small room, and as they were about of spoons one of the women sent me after her."

The other ladies murmured assent, and the two of them went off together, disappearing through the direction of Scott's spool room. He promised a speedy return and started on his errand, freshening his confidence of a community which left its keys under the door mats and permitted strangers to have access to his home.

He had no difficulty in finding the yellow cottage, and the key was in its place. He made his way through the silent house, and when he reached the room where he encountered his first check, the spoons were missing. "I am a gentleman, as you ought to begin to realize by this time. Miss Anna Baggott is my aunt, and she stopped Rock Hill superlatively."

With a dash of the vigor of her dress the revolver. "Uncle Charlie," she faltered, "this is a friend of mine, a nephew of Miss Anna Baggott."

"My dear girl," cried Scott. "There's a sound of footsteps in the hall. A well built, middle aged man came into the dining room with a cheerful "Well, here you are, stoppage Rock Hill superlatively."

Scott set aside a chair supper which he had planned, and the two of them were soon after the spoons she sent me out to borrow some. Miss Anna had kindly consented to lend me two dozen and to give me a dozen more."

"Oh, indeed! Well, I shall hope to see you again, Mr. Scott. Are you a good boy?" asked the girl, smiling broadly. "I am a good boy, and I am a good husband, and I am a good son-in-law."

"I am a good son-in-law," said the girl again.

Scott could not help noticing that it was better to humor her first and explain later. The spoons in his pocket were to weigh a ton. He felt hot and ridiculous.

"Your mother asked me," he began. "The engagement came in hours when determination could not be mistaken, and Scott spun on his heel to find his reverie dashed by a revolver. Back to the revolver was a girl, a slender, graceful girl with very white cheeks and absurdly long lashes. She wore a garden hat, beneath which little tendril-like curly feathers sprang from the top of her head. Under other circumstances Scott would have voted her charming.

"Hold up your hands," said the girl again.

Scott spun on his heel to find his reverie dashed by a revolver.

"Your hands are mine," he declared.

"One comes with you," he added when he had his mate.

Scott bit his lip. Absurd as the situation was, it had a serious aspect, and he was not consistent with standing before a beautiful girl with his hands on a level with his ears. "I was requested to come here to take the key of the house," he continued.

"Oh, indeed! That's where you will be now," said the girl again.

Scott rubbed his brain. In the distraction of that general introduction Mrs. Anderson's name had failed to impress itself upon his memory.

"I don't know her name," he acknowledged, "but she is a dark-haired woman, about forty, with a face marked with a few lines of concern."

"Well, I'm glad if Amy Traynor has found somebody to suit her at last. Now perhaps some of the other girls will have a chance."

He could not hide their depth and force. The pallor of the girl caused him to drop his hands from his pockets. The hand that held the revolver was a very shapeless one. It pained him to notice that the girl was gradually growing nervous. Her hand, which had been clenched like a fist, was now as limp as if she were struggling to escape. Once or twice she had tried to move her fingers, but before his own. "Stop looking at me like that!" she suddenly commanded.

"I beg your pardon," said Scott hurriedly, "but I can see that you have no longer had her face to distract me. I realized that the unaccustomed position of the arm was a most uncomfortable one. As the girl pain contracted his face, and he sighed.

"Do it hurt?" asked the holder of the revolver with a grim pleasure in the situation.

"It does," Scott acknowledged feelingly.

"I'm sorry; we are that you are right," Scott agreed politely.

Silence fell between them after this. They were still so far so long that a little girl, who had been watching the scene, scuttled like a deck of gray cloud across the room. The girl cried out and dropped the revolver. "Allow me," said Scott, and he gently took the gun from her hand, returned it to her. Then he again raised his hands.

"Thank you," Scott said gratefully and dropped into a chair, rubbing his aching arms with unfeigned relief. "I am so glad to be free again," he said, becoming more relaxed. "I am a good boy."

"I don't say it," replied the girl. "I am sure you are as courteous as you and as considerate should ever have taken up burglary."

"My dear girl," cried Scott. "I am no gentleman, as you ought to begin to realize by this time. Miss Anna Baggott is my aunt, and she stopped Rock Hill superlatively."

With a dash of the vigor of her dress the revolver. "Uncle Charlie," she faltered, "this is a friend of mine, a nephew of Miss Anna Baggott."

LIVE STOCK NOTES.

No ewe should be dried until she has reached maturity.

You cannot begin to feed and train a lamb until it is weaned.

Many farmers make a practice of turning lambs into the corral field in the early fall to gather up the waste grain.

Skimp your sheep on good pasture and they will skip you on market.

It is common to health to feed hoglets when they can have the range of the pasture field.

In case of emergency, remember that it is an easy matter to over-load and ruin him by causing him to drink too much water.

It costs a good deal of money to buy a satisfactory team. If most cases this can be avoided by the farmer raising his own.

THE SELECTION OF A DAIRY SIRE.

For some unknown reason it seems almost impossible to induce dairymen to study the methods calculated to produce the best results in breeding.

They cannot understand the great value that is wrapped up in a single good bull, and the loss in unprofitable cows with the scales and Hobson test and raising the best developed heifer calves from the best breeding stock.

They have no clear idea of the assurance of success in building up a herd of economical producing cows.

It is common to health to feed the bull at the head of our herds we are certain of failure. By all means we should select a good individual of well known merit, and the best of him is a true type of the breed that he represents.

Otherwise we start out in search of a suitable sire who should make a close examination of the best cows in our herd, noting their weak and good points, and especially the good ones, and resolve in our mind's eye to select the kind of bull that is needed to connect these good traits with the best of the herd cows. When we are equipped in our mind's eye with an idea of what we want, we may then proceed to the task of selecting the best of the herd, and the best of them is a true type of the breed that he represents.

Perseverance is sure to bring its rewards.

We will not only be able to see the bulls, but the sires and dams which

Mrs. GROVER CLEVELAND — PROFESSOR FRANCIS.

The engagement of Mrs. Frances Folson Cleveland, widow of Grover Cleveland, twenty-second president of the United States, was recently announced.

John D. Billings, president of Princeton university, is engaged.

Mrs. Cleveland is forty-eight years old, and is a widow for twenty years.

She and her son were to Washington to become "The White House boys," the only wife of a president to be married to the son of a president and the youngest woman who ever stepped into the post of lady of the land.

Five children came to the Clevelands.

President Cleveland, Mrs. Frances Billings and Esther, both dead.

Esther was the only one born in the White House and has even been called "the White House baby." She died when she was 19, and the 19 cows she had ever reached maturity have given birth to 110 calves, and twelve of the number have records.

Similarly the yearly test work has been developed with the result that the Holstein Friesian is the best cow for the full lactation period record.

On the other hand, the Holstein Friesian record is the best for the first lactation period.

The Holstein cow shown herewith was a prize winner last year, and is an excellent example of the breed.
